Official Release of Plant

Plant, version control app and plugin for Sketch.

Los Angeles, CA, Nov 14th, 2017 - Plant, the most effective version control app and plugin for Sketch becomes publicly available. Designers and teams around the world will now have the chance to experience the most anticipated tool that will streamline their work and liberate their creativity.

Plant is a simple and powerful version control tool that is seamlessly integrated with Sketch so that designers may invest their energy and focus in creative work. Plant works to organize your projects and ensures that none of your creative process is lost. By keeping track of all versions and metadata including date, time, and the user that pushed the specific version, Plant maximizes the efficiency of teamwork and ensures that users have access to the creative history of a project. For the past few months, Plant has been in private beta testing. Our users have played an integral role in amplifying Plant to become more than a version control tool. Besides version control, Plant offers strong collaboration features for users. We are continually expanding Plant, and more features are in the pipeline.

Plant was designed to maximize productivity and minimize the time lost by teams when keeping track of the evolution of a project. In the past, many teams, including ours, have run into major problems when multiple individuals were working on a common project. Files tended to get lost, user-specific changes were difficult to track, and it became very difficult to find older versions of a project. Plant effectively diffuses these problems. We decided to use our time and dedication to solve these problems for all designers. We have integrated Plant into our everyday workflow, which has drastically improved our creative process. We believe it will help many other teams as well.

About Plant

Plant is made up of a small team of creative individuals who came together to build a version control and collaboration tool for screen designers. You may not know who we are, but our product speaks for itself. Our users love Plant and find it to be an essential component of their design experience. We plan to continually improve Plant to meet the needs of a diverse group of creative minds.
